2ND ANNUAL
"PJNK MAKES THE BOYS WJNK" RUN
(in memory o Tasty's Granny)

When: Monday, Nov. 17th, 2014 @7:00 pm

Where: Royal Oak, 1981 St. Joseph Blvd, Orleans

Rating: 6.9 out of 100

Was the weather co-operative or not? That is the question. Some would readily admit that despite the slush and cold puddles it was a good night for running and of course others would say the exact opposite. The positive hashers would say that it was not too cold, no wind, the gently falling snow and abundance of Christmas lights made for a pleasant night out. While others would say that the snow, cold, wet and the early display of Christmas lights did nothing to raise their spirits! The one thing that everyone did agree on was that it was nice to see the number of hashers who were dressed in pink.

During the opening circle the Grand Mattress while being inundated with snowballs had a hard time maintaining any form of order while Taste the Rainbow explained the trail. Once the trail markings were explained, including the infamous hook, and the blessing the hashers set off through the snow, slush and cold puddles.

The trail took the hashers up the escarpment and then up some more. It seemed as if all the hills only went up! The trail wound its way through the newer suburbs of Orleans and along snowy trails. On one of the snowy trails one of the hashers attempted their hand at a bit of ballet, unfortunately for him it ended up as more of a nose dive in the snow. Speaking of nose diving in the snow at the first of many hash holds it did not take long for a snowball fight to begin. There was ample ammunition for the eager combatants to engage in a bit of frivolity before carrying on once again.

Tasty did a fine job of making the trail in biodegradable, environmentally friendly, instantly decomposing, red spray paint with a few orange juice crystals thrown in for good measure. While there were no false trails there were numerous checks and holds to keep the pack together.

After finally coming down from the escarpment it was ON ON along another snowy multi-use trail and then wind our way through the older parts of Orleans to reach the rehydration stop which proved to be a short distance back to the ON IN.

Both the GM and RA observed a number of crimes on trail and the sinners were brought in to explain the reason for their errant ways and were then duly punished. Comments on the trail ranged from: not enough hills, not enough snow, too warm, not enough puddles, we never did find the song stop, hills I hate hills, cold wet feet, too early for Christmas lights, we need more snow, why so many checks and holds. All in all the hashers seemed to have enjoyed the hill climb in the snow and slush.
